LIVING THE #MONSTERLIFE

-What does it mean to live the monsterlife? It's a mindset, a passion, a way of life for those in the world of Monster Trucks. For many, it's years of dedication and hard work that have brought them to their dreams of being involved in the day to day operation of these mechanical beasts, and doing everything it takes to put on Monster Truck events around the world.

While the fans line up outside the venue, drivers, crew members, officials, and track builders give it their all, day in and day out to bring you the best event possible. Hours after the stands are empty those same people are still working, signing autographs, repairing trucks, and tearing down tracks. The long hours and sleepless nights are worth it to them, because it's what they live for, to thrill audiences across the globe and make memories that last a lifetime.

The love of the monsterlife is often love at first site. That first encounter with a Monster Truck, no matter the age, is the spark that ignites a devotion for the sport. The sights, the sounds, and the atmosphere are what drive them to become involved, spending weeks at a time away from home and living life on the road.

Others, are born into it and have lived it their entire lives, like Allison Patrick. As the daughter of Hall of Famer Dan Patrick, Allison grew up around the sport with her family, spending years around the shop and traveling around the world with the Samson Monster Truck, before eventually moving into the driver's seat.

While the challenges of being a Monster Truck driver can be many, Allison also balances the monsterlife with being an ICU nurse during the week. Allison says, "the look on my patient's faces when they find out about my monsterlife is priceless." Going from the long hours in the ICU, Allison still manages to find the time to swap the scrubs for the drivers suit, and pilot Samson on the weekends.

Two-time Freestyle World Champion Jim Koehler has lived the monsterlife for nearly two decades now as the pilot of the Avenger Monster Truck. Koehler started small, with a single truck operation, eventually expanding to owning and managing four of the hardest running trucks on the circuit.

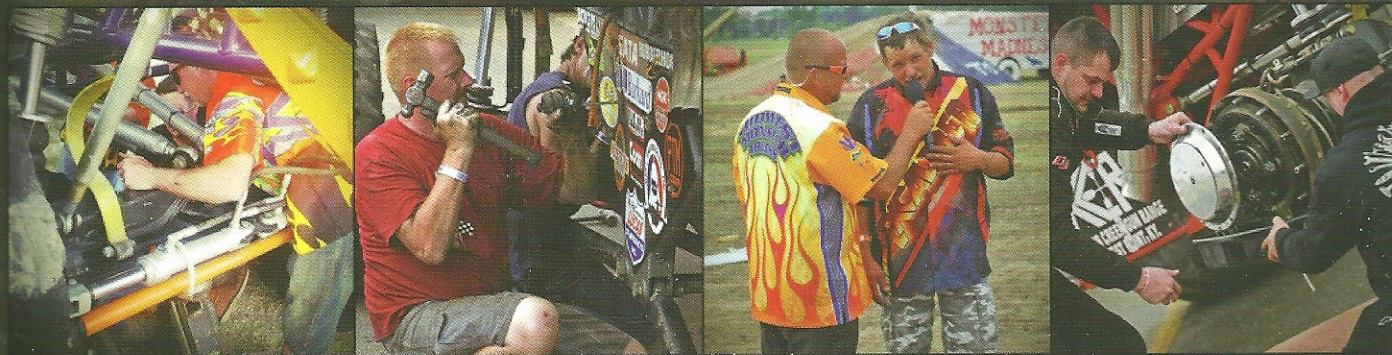

"The monsterlife is awesome, but it's grueling. I have tons of stuff to do the minute I get home from a show to get the truck ready for the next event. Sometimes we'll work 24 hours straight, sometimes we'll drive 24 hours straight, just to make the next event," said Koehler. "It's not all glitz and glamor, but there are awesome times. We love to meet the fans and hear how much they love us. When we go out and have an awesome show and the fans are excited, it's what keeps us motivated."

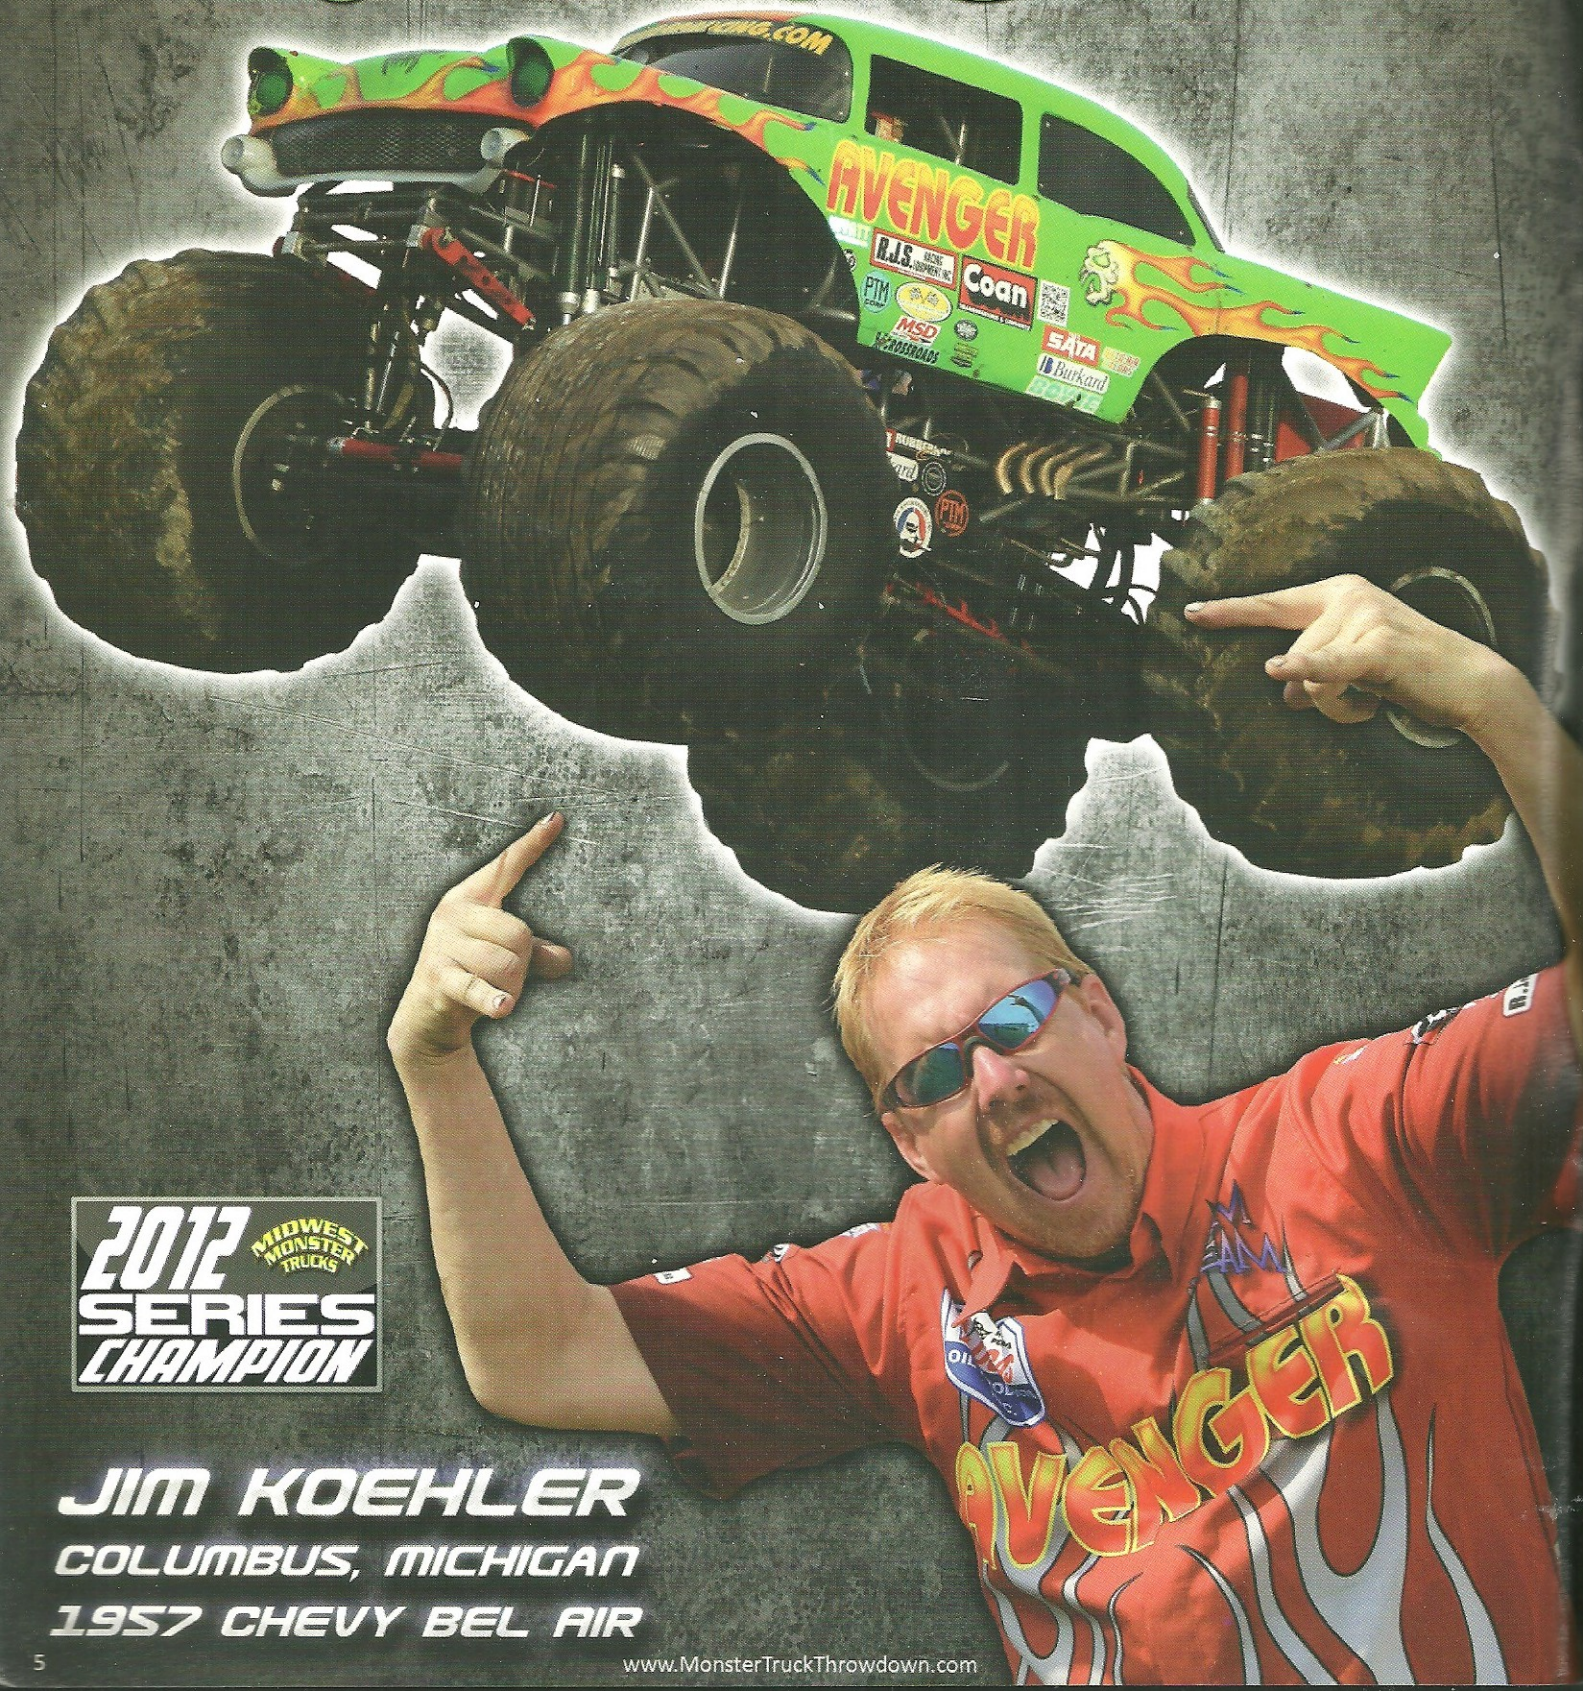

Jon Zimmer is another shining example of living the monsterlife. Over the last decade Zimmer has lived and breathed everything the monsterlife has had to offer. He sacrificed a normal life at home with his family to live out his dreams of becoming a monster truck driver.

With humble beginnings as a crew chief for Andy Slifko and the Eradicator, Zimmer rose through the ranks and got his first chance to drive in 2005. 8 years later Zimmer found himself with the opportunity of a lifetime, to drive an iconic black and green machine. It wasn't an easy journey, as Zimmer spent months at a time away from home, driving the rig from show to show, and maintaining two monster trucks for several years. The hard work and determination paid off though, as Zimmer has been able to pilot some of the most legendary names in front of millions of fans around world.

The unsung heroes of the sport are some of the hardest working people behind the scenes that make Monster Truck events possible; the crew members, officials, dirt crews and production staff. Sleepless nights and seemingly endless work days are all too common. They traverse the globe putting on these spectacles, banding together to make it all happen time and time again. They do it all for the love of the monsterlife.

A man with short brown hair, wearing a red and yellow Barbarian Monster Truck polo shirt and black pants, stands in a grassy field. To his right is the rear of a monster truck with a red and black flame paint job and large, treaded tires. The background shows a line of trees under a cloudy sky.

was a huge year for Miami, Oklahoma native, Devin Jones. Making his first full season appearance with the Monster Truck Throwdown and Midwest Monster Truck Events, Jones set out to put Barbarian in the number one spot each time the mighty Ford machine rolled to the line.

After being invited to Young Guns in Las Vegas, Jones locked in to dominating the Summer in the Midwest. Sending names like Avenger, Razin Kane, and Bounty Hunter to the pits was no easy task and was more than just insane moves and luck. Emotion, talent, precision, and motivation earned Devin Jones the 2013 Series Championship in a knock down, drag out Summer on the Monster Truck Throwdown tour.

Jones' passion for the sport of monster truck racing and its fans is obvious and is a true definition of the season.
